The Luminal GI Group at the VA

The Section of Digestive Diseases at the West Haven VA has a rich history of research, education, leadership and clinical care in gastroenterology. Dr. Robert Donaldson, (former Chair of Medicine and acting Yale Medical School Dean), Dr. Rosemarie Fisher (Dean of Graduate Medical Education), and Dr. Cyrus Kapadia (former Yale Internal Medicine Residency Program Director), began their careers at the VA.

Other VA faculty have made prominent research contributions. Dr. Fred Gorelick is an expert in pancreas disease and has defined and advanced our knowledge of early cellular changes in acute pancreatitis, and is defining interventions that may prevent inflammation. Dr. Gorelick has also been the Director of the Yale Digestive Diseases Fellowship and currently directs the NIH-supported T32 “Training Program in Investigative Gastroenterology” which educates and mentors our fellows in GI research. He is also the Deputy Director of the Yale MD/PhD program has mentored physicians and scientists who has subsequently had successfully academic careers. Dr. Loren Laine is a clinical investigator who is one of the world’s experts in the management of gastrointestinal diseases, particularly GI bleeding. Dr. Laine’s international leadership is reflected by his authorship of numerous practice guidelines and his past election as President of the American Gastroenterological Association. Dr. Laine is a Professor of Medicine and Director of Clinical Research within the Section of Digestive Diseases at Yale.

Dr. Avlin Imaeda is the Program director of the Yale GI fellowship, which includes training at the VA Connecticut Healthcare System as well as Yale-New Haven Hospital. Among her many educational activities, Dr. Imaeda is developing a medical school case-based electronic teaching tool. Dr. Petr Protiva is an expert on colorectal neoplasia and vitamin D metabolism and has an active clinical research program, while Dr. Anil Nagar is the Director of Endoscopy for the VA Connecticut Healthcare System and an expert in advanced endoscopic procedures.

The Section of Digestive Diseases provides outstanding GI care to more than 50,000 veterans in Connecticut, documenting the high level of care through routine monitoring of quality measures.
