Supporting children through difficult times

Frightening events that are widely reported in the media, such as the coronavirus pandemic, can cause children to worry about themselves and people they love. It is normal for children to have big feelings when something scary is happening or has happened, and many will be upset, sad or fearful at times.

Here are some tips to help you support children through difficult times:

Talk

Children often find it helpful if they can talk about what is happening, helping them to make sense of events and feel less afraid.

Even young children are likely to hear reports in the media or overhear adults talking about deaths due to coronavirus, or the risk of death from getting sick with the virus. It’s important to talk about their fears or anxieties honestly and openly in age-appropriate language. It may also help to restrict the amount of media coverage and social media they are exposed to, and balance this with other activities and positive things to focus on.

Children’s understanding of death varies with their stage of development and it can be helpful to understand why children may respond differently.

To learn more about children’s understanding of death at different ages, you can watch a short guidance film here: Children’s understanding of death at different ages.

Be honest

Give children honest, factual information in language appropriate to their age and level of understanding. Be guided by their questions and keep your answers simple. Children can pick up when their questions are being avoided and may fill in the blanks themselves, which can cause further anxiety.

It’s not necessary to go into detail but it will be helpful to explain things that affect them directly, such as why they are being asked to wash their hands regularly and how the virus is spread, why their school has closed, why they can’t visit a grandparent or why a parent is working from home.

Acknowledge concerns

Children may be concerned about someone they know getting sick or even dying. Explain that some people who catch the virus will have no symptoms and will be fine, most people who catch the virus will experience only a mild form of the virus and will get better, but some people are more vulnerable... and so we need to make sure they are protected and safe. Be honest though and don’t shy away from explaining that some people may die. Children need to trust that you are being honest and open with them, so that they are comfortable asking you other questions with confidence.

Create routines

Currently, keeping to usual, daily routines might be difficult. But routines can be reassuring to children and help things feel stable when everything else seems to be disrupted. If you are at home with your child, try to keep to regular routines such as meal times, school work, breaks, play and bedtime.

Children feel more in control, and therefore less fearful, if they are given clear tasks, such as washing their hands properly, and simple jobs around the house.

Make sure you’re supported

If you are struggling with your own reactions, it is important for you to reach out for support for yourself. Children and young people are quick to pick up on the distress of others around them, even if the adults are trying to hide their feelings. Make time to do something for you that helps you to relax and takes your mind off the news. Make sure you connect with others in any way you can that is safe, such as video chat or phone call, and keep active.

---

For further resources, you may wish to visit Child Bereavement UK’s website:

www.childbereavementuk.org