Registration Fee: $40 per participant
Continuing Nursing Education Credits Now Available*

Intended Audience
Nurses and other healthcare professionals working with families, including health home visitors, other healthcare staff, and professionals public health, child welfare, and related fields.

Training Focus
This session addresses the concept of reflective nursing and the related ways in which healthcare professionals can reach their health education goals with young families, whether working in the home, clinic, or another setting.
Reflective concepts based on the Minding the Baby® approach are discussed, along with techniques to assist healthcare providers in addressing barriers that may cause common miscommunication and misunderstandings with families.

Denise Webb, MSN, APRN, PNP, IMH-E® worked as an early childhood educator for many years, until she completed her certification as a Pediatric Nurse Practitioner and received a Master of Science in Nursing from Yale University in 2002. In 2015, she earned the Connecticut Association for Infant Mental Health Endorsement in Infant Mental Health (IMH). Ms. Webb has been actively involved in Minding the Baby® Home Visiting since its inception and maintains a part-time clinical caseload while also taking an active role on the MTB training team. She worked with the MTB team to develop an introductory training on clinical approaches for reflective parenting programs that has drawn participants from around the world. Ms. Webb also serves as a consultant for a similar home visitation program in Florida and is an integral part of the Yale consult team for MTB implementation.

Yale School of Nursing is approved as a provider of nursing continuing professional development by the Connecticut Nurses’ Association, an accredited approver by the American Nurses Credentialing Center’s Commission on Accreditation.
