YALE UROLOGY VIRTUAL CME SERIES COMES TO A CLOSE
Our five-week long virtual Urology CME Series concluded on May 25, and thanks to the participation of our faculty and providers it was very well-received.

A total of 155 attendees, including 88 unique attendees, participated in the program to hear the latest information on urological disorders and cancers from our team.

An attendee survey is currently underway with very positive feedback so far, including, "Excellent series. Well presented in a clinically relevant way;" as well as additional feedback that was submitted via email: "They were very helpful. Thank you for sponsoring them;" The pediatric presentation was outstanding;" "Thanks for making this available - very interesting and informative;" I found last nights talk very informative."

If you attended one of the seminars, please make sure to complete the survey by clicking here.

Additionally, all five seminars were recorded, and can be viewed on the Yale Urology website.

DIVERSITY, EQUITY, AND INCLUSION (DEI) COMMITTEE UPDATE

The Yale Urology Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Committee has been very busy since its inception earlier this year. Two exciting updates to share include the news that as a department, Urology will again offer virtual-only interviews to its residency applicants.

Additionally, a Women in Urology Journal and Book Club has been created by Jaime Cavallo, MD, MPHS, and Leslie Rickey, MD, MPH. Dr. Rickey shares, "When Jaime Cavallo, the 'Status of Women in Medicine' (SWIM) representative for Urology, sent an email highlighting the new Women's Leadership Resource Library created by SWIM, I was grateful to have a curated list of books, podcasts, and TED talks."

"However, I know we are all busy, and setting aside time to devote to professional development is difficult. I also find that female leadership topics are enriched by discussions that acknowledge a diversity of experiences, so the concept of a group conversation seemed like a natural way to set goals for exploring the resources in the library. Jaime then suggested a book club-type meeting, but we wanted to wait until we could safely meet in person. We are aiming to have our first meeting in the fall - more details to come!"

YALE NEW HAVEN HOSPITAL ACHIEVES MAGNET STATUS FOR THIRD TIME
From March 29 - April 2, American Nurses Credentialing Center (ANCC) Magnet Recognition Program appraisers came to Yale New Haven Hospital (YNHH) for a weeklong virtual site visit. Magnet is the most prestigious distinction a healthcare organization can receive for nursing excellence and quality patient outcomes. YNHH has earned the four-year Magnet recognition twice already, in 2011 and 2016.

Some of our urology nurses were invited to attend virtual lunch sessions, and there was a virtual site visit to our clinic in Yale Physicians Building (YPB) for a 20-minute interview where staff highlighted what they enjoyed most about working at YNHH (pictured, right). The appraisers were very impressed with our team, visiting three of our ambulatory sites, and also highlighting the roles of our urology techs and nurses in our clinics.

On May 27, it was announced that YNHH has achieved Magnet Status for the third time, making it one of six hospitals in Connecticut with this status.

Pictured: Malissa Williams, Urology Technician; Cherrelle Eaton, Urology Technician; Elena Grimes, Urology Technician; Bridget Meadow, RN; Zoey Potter, RN; Ellie Bernier, RN; greet the Magnet appraisers as they arrive at YPB 3 for their virtual visit.
